The owners of this Chevy Chase, MD, home had two distinct requests: a larger kitchen for entertaining, with stately moldings and white marble counters that are hallmarks of the DC region's "common [traditional] aesthetic," and a complete redo of the family room with "a light and airy contemporary aesthetic." Maria Fanjul of Anthony Wilder Design/Build made sure her designs for the two spaces, now connected by a breezeway of full-height windows, are not mutually exclusive. The ebony-stained kitchen island echoes the black marble on the family room's built-ins as well as its other black accents, and the gracious moldings in the kitchen are repeated around the windows leading into the family room. Contemporary light fixtures and seating in the kitchen and adjoining dining room recall lines and patterns in the family room's interior. Thus, one architectural style evolves smoothly into another.
